You think that the teacher gave extra points to the other team in a class game. Your team is losing and everyone is really upset. The teacher asks what's wrong. What do you say?

Your sibling gets a bigger brownie than you do at dessert. You feel jealous and angry. What do you say to your dad who cut them?

You're losing a sports game that you feel like you should be winning. You're more frustrated than you've ever been in your life. The next kid up on the team is not a strong player. What do you say to them?

Everyone in your class says that Katie is a loser. You saw her crying in the bathroom during lunch. Your friend, who is always talking trash about people, asks what's wrong with Katie. You're pretty sure she doesn't care and is just looking for more dirt. What do you say?

You're just at the most important level on your game and your dad says to turn it off and come to dinner. What do you say?

You come outside one morning and your bike is broken. You suspect that Spike, the neighborhood bully, broke it on purpose but you have no proof. Your friend asks what happened to your bike. What do you say?

You and your little sibling are at the grocery store and your grandma sends you off to get a few tomatoes. You both start loading tomatoes into the bag when there's a tomato avalanche and they fall all over the floor and roll down the produce aisle. The manager looks at you, holding the bag of tomatoes, then at your younger sibling, who is actually eating a tomato at this point. What do you say?

Your teacher asks you if you cheated on the test. You actually did look at a few answers from the flashcards under your desk. It was a bad choice and you know that if you admit it, you'll get a zero on the test and your dad will be angry. What do you say?

Your older sister is looking everywhere for her shirt, which you know is in the bottom of your dirty laundry hamper since you "borrowed" it without asking yesterday. What do you say?

Your friend told you a juicy secret—they like someone in your class. Another friend comes up and asks what you're talking about. What do you say?

What to Do:

Print and cut apart. Provide one set for each small group.

Your mom asks for your help doing chores while she's sitting at her desk working on the computer. She doesn't look that busy, and you really don't feel like unloading the dishwasher. What do you say?

The substitute gym teacher tells you to run laps at gym. The regular gym teacher doesn't start class that way. Everyone is grumbling and the sub asks you what's wrong. What do you say?

Someone you don't really like trips in the cafeteria—right in front of you! Their lunch goes flying everywhere. The whole place laughs and points. What do you say?

You and your older brother are in a fight. You know that he's sensitive about his height—that he's not as tall as your dad yet. You feel angry, like you want to hurt him. What do you say?

Your babysitter is late to pick you up. She pulls up drinking a fresh latte, but you had to wait outside in the cold. What do you say?

Your parents say that your planned vacation is canceled because your Great Aunt Muriel got really sick. She's not a relative that you're that close to, but your mom talks to her on the phone every week. She's flying out to care for her. It doesn't feel fair to miss your whole vacation for someone you've barely met. What do you say?

It's time to leave the arcade but you haven't gotten to play all the games you wanted to. What do you say to your uncle as you leave?

You're at a birthday party, and the birthday girl opens a game you've wanted for ages. Then she opens another present, and it's the same game. She just tosses them in a pile. Your friend whispers, "Wow, that's a great game. I can't believe she got two." What do you say?

Your aunts are paying a lot of attention to your new baby cousin. No one is listening to you talk about your new soccer team at the family dinner. You feel ignored. What do you say?

Your parents have said no to everything today. You don't know what's wrong with them, but you are so angry! Your mom asks you to take a walk around the block with her before dinner (which is not the pizza you asked for but broccoli casserole). What do you say?
